INDIA –
West Bengal
The School for Blind Children

Dear Friends and Supporters,

Raj from the School for Blind Children in West Bengal, India, writes: “Here we have temperatures of about 40 degrees (Celsius). Such heat is not common this time of the year.” He tells us that the authorities want schools to be closed for a week. But since most of the students of the School for Blind Children come from villages far away, they cannot be sent home on such short notice. Instead, the boarding school tries to arrange things as well as possible for the students. But before the extreme heat arrived, the school organized many activities.

The school celebrated 58 years since its founding.

Two beginners (first graders), Souvik Biswas and Ananya Das, were accepted as students.

A bus trip with a picnic was arranged.

After the hiatus of the pandemic year, the annual sports competitions resumed.

Greetings from the School for Blind
Children and
